Outbuildings: corn crib, other small buildings on side of road at house

Historic Information: Delbert Shelton - Born: November 29, 1902; Died: September 27, 1964
Buried in the Aikens-Shelton Cemetery on Cutshall Town Rd.

In 1950 Delbert Shelton saw a barn in east Tennessee that he admired and recruited his brother Charlie and nephew Winfred to help him build one like it. They made many trips back to Tennessee to note the details. This example is the barn that became the iconic 20th century American classic with the gambrel roof and red paint. Unlike most barns in Madison County, the loft was never adapted to hang burley tobacco. The hay loft and roof are uncommon local examples of a structure with no interior posts, using free-standing shallow roof trusses allowing for a larger, open loft. The rail-mounted hay fork and pulley system remain, but became obsolete when baled hay replaced loose-stacked hay. The barn is a classic livestock gambrel roof barn with self-supporting roof structure of shallow trusses, allowing for a large unobstructed hay loft and using a rail-mounted hay fork and pulley system.

Setting and/or Surrounding Land Use: This barn is placed in the upper end of the Shelton Laurel valley in an area of large, prime bottom land where burley tobacco was the main crop for many generations. This makes it an unusual barn in that it was never converted to hang burley tobacco. It is approx. 60 feet from the creek in a flood plain and occasionally becomes flooded.
